

Camp Read-A Lot

Clark's Point School

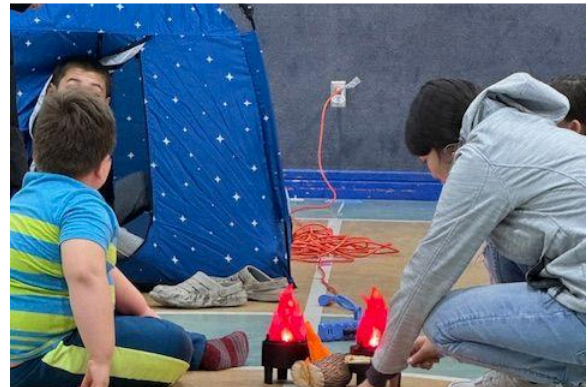

The Premise

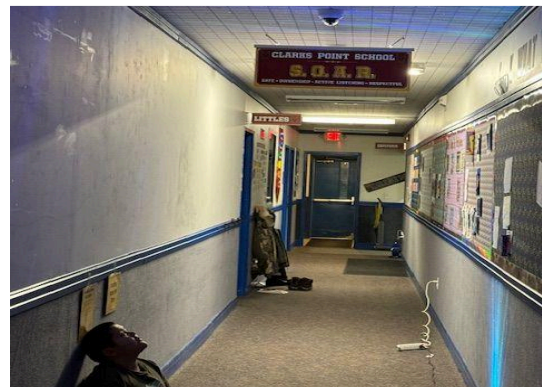

After an epidemic swept through the village of Clark's Point, touching everyone in its path including the teachers. Ms. Kelly and Ms. Anna decided that the best thing to do to celebrate the survival of the students was to host a camp in the gym. They called it Camp Read-A-Lot and it had various camping activities all focused on celebrating reading.

To support the telling of stories, there was a puppet making station, which was a huge hit with all who attended. While tents in the center of the gym let students experience reading in a tent without being outside. What is associated with camping? The smell of smoke from a crackling fire, the exclamations of people as their marshmallows catch on fire? While there was not a real fire, there was still a station where people could make their own marshmallows.

Should anyone wish to challenge another to a game, there were several stations that were perfect for that. There was a word sorting station, a game station with such games as Guess Who and Uno, and a station where students could fish for words. To make up for the lack of stars inside the gym, lights were set up in the hallway that mimicked the night sky so participants could read under the stars.

Sitting around a campfire

Gazing at the stars

Reading around the Fire

While the younger students cook, a story is being read to them.

Student vs. Teacher

In this case, the student won. Wonder what prize she got!

S'mores

In a debate that has no end, everyone wants to know, toasted marshmallows or burned? She says, toasted, he says golden.

With a little help

You are never too old to ask for help from your mom.

