qusngiq reindeer; sheep # *This word was probably used prior to 1900 in regard to reindeer pelts traded from Siberia, where cognates of the term are used for reindeer in Chukchi and Koryak, native languages of reindeer herders there; reindeer herds came to the Yup'ik area around 1900, when the government sponsored reindeer herding in Alaska with animals and herders from Siberia (later from Lappland). In any event, in the early decades of the twentieth century this word was used in Yup'ik Bible translation in place of sheep, because reindeer, like sheep, are gentle, domestic animals that need protection — essentially the only such animals known to Yup'ik people at the time. Later, with the decline of reindeer herding and with increasing familiarity with the English Bible, the word qusngiq in the Bible was understood as sheep, especially in the Kuskokwim and Bristol Bay areas, while it retained its original meaning, reindeer, in other Yup'ik areas. -a- / -ar- / -aa- / +a- / +aar- to V repeatedly

The first three forms (-a-, -ar-, -aa-) of this postbase are non-productive, and the occurrences listed here for these three forms are relatively complete for our data. The fourth form (+a-) is used on verb bases not taking one of the first three forms and not ending in te, and the fifth form (+aar-) is used on verb bases ending in te.

Form -a- (note that this form does not occur with bases ending in ar- or ag-):

qalrir- 'to cry out'	qalriaguq 'it is making noises' (animal and bird calls; nonspeech high-pitched sounds) akngir- (root) 'in pain'	akngiaguq 'he is repeatedly having pains, is aching' anglani- 'to have fun'	anglaniaguq 'he is enjoying himself' irir- (root) 'slanting'	iriaguq 'he is leaning one way and the other, moving to and fro, rocking back and forth' aqvaqur- 'to run'	aqvaquaguq 'he is running around' alerqur- 'to tell someone to do something'	alerquaguq 'he is giving advice'

The following postbases, -li-, -liaq, -linqigte-, -linraq, -liqe⁻¹, -liqe⁻², -lir-, -liur-, -liyar-, start with li and drop the final consonant of the base to which they are attached. With such postbases it is generally permissible to delete the l of the postbase and the preceding vowel after the postbase has been attached. For example, angyaliuq ‘he is making a boat’ can be shortened to angyiuq. In some cases, however, the shortened form is not acceptable to all speakers. In other cases the shortened form is preferred to the longer form, and in some cases the shortened form has acquired a meaning slightly different from that of the longer form. This is particularly true of -li- and -lir-; for this reason, the shortened forms -i- and -ir- are listed as postbases in their own right.

There are four polarity situations to consider (note that in the following translations, "(subj.))" and "(obj.))" pertain to the derived verb).

1) Embedded verb considered intransitive; derived verb used with an intransitive ending. In this case the subject of the derived verb is the impersonal 'it' and the subject of the embedded verb is the indefinite 'someone', or else the subject of the derived verb is the subject of the embedded verb:

ayag- 'to leave'	ayagnariuq it (impersonal subj.) 'is time for someone to leave', 'it is time for us to leave' or 'it is time for him (subj.) to leave'; ayagnariunga 'it is time for me (subj.) to leave' nere- 'to eat'	nernariuq it (impersonal subj.) 'is time for someone to eat', 'it is time for us to eat', or 'it is time for him (subj.) to eat'

2) Embedded verb considered intransitive; derived verb used with transitive ending. In this case the subject of the derived verb is the impersonal 'it' and the object of the derived verb is the subject of the embedded verb:

ayag- 'to leave'	ayagnarianga 'it (impersonal subj.) is time for me (obj.) to leave' nere- 'to eat'	nernarianga 'it (impersonal subj.) is time for me (obj.) to eat'

3) Embedded verb considered transitive; derived verb used with an intransitive ending. In this case the subject of the derived verb is the object of the embedded verb, the subject of which is the indefinite 'someone':

ikayur- 'to help'	ikayurnariunga 'it is time for someone to help me (subj.)' (i.e., it is time for me to be helped)
nere- 'to eat'	nernariuq 'it is time for someone to eat it' (subj.) (i.e., it is time for it to be eaten)

4) Embedded verb considered transitive; derived verb used with a transitive ending. In this case the subject of the derived verb is the impersonal 'it' and the subject of the embedded verb is the indefinite 'someone'; or else the subject of the derived verb is the subject of the embedded verb. In either case, the object of the derived verb is the object of the embedded verb:

ikayur- 'to help'	ikayurnarianga 'it (impersonal subj.) is time for someone to help me (obj.)', or 'it is time for him (subj.) to help me (obj.)'
nere- 'to eat'	nernaria 'it is time for him (subj.) to eat,' or 'it is time for him (subj.) to eat it (obj.)' @~+narqe- to tend to cause one to V; to be able to be V-ed # takes intransitive endings only; when followed by a suffix that drops e and begins with a consonant followed by a vowel, then this postbase takes the form -naqe-; also used with "emotional roots"; note that negatives (and other such forms) of the present postbase -narqe- (and those derived from it, e.g.

-yugnarqe-) are derived from or based on the simpler, and in itself essentially non-productive form -nar- (see -naq¹), thus giving -naite- ‘to tend not to cause one to V’ (rather than -narqaite-); cf. -nirqe- > -naqsaaqe-, -ninarqe-, -yanarqe-, -yugnarqe-, -yunarqe-, -na¹-; < -naq¹-rqe¹-

@nga- to be in a state of having V-ed; or having been V-ed # used only with verb bases that describe getting into or putting into a certain state and which end in te; however, this postbase is not generally used with those bases (mainly from "postural roots") which end in te and which use the postbase -ngqa- to form statives; with bases that do not end in te, a stative form is formed with the postbase -ma- (which may indeed also be used with bases that do end in te); takes intransitive endings only; if the embedded verb takes only transitive endings, then the subject of the derived verb is the object of the embedded verb (as in, ukitaa 'he punctured it', ukisngauq 'it is punctured'); if the embedded verb takes intransitive endings only, then the subject of the derived verb is the subject of the embedded verb (as in kit'uq 'it sank', kisngauq 'it has sunk'); if the embedded verb takes either type of ending, then the subject of the derived verb could be the subject or the object of the embedded verb; > -yugnga-; < PE pb. ŋa-¹

If a full vowel precedes the te, then t changes to s (y in HBC, EG):

elite- 'to learn'	elisngauq 'he is learned, it knowledgeable'
ukite- 'to make a hole'	ukisngauq 'it is punctured' kit'e- 'to sink'	kisngauq 'it is sunken' put'e- 'to bend down'	pusngauq 'it is bent down' tut'e- 'to step, to land'	tusngauq 'it is resting on something, depends on something, is attached to something'

If two syllables, the second ending in a fricative, precede te, then te is dropped (note that the preceding fricative becomes voiced):

kitugte- 'to fix'	kitugngauq 'it is fixed' akagte- 'to roll'	akagngauq 'it is rolled into a ball'; 'it has been rolled away' kenagte- 'to tidy'	kenagngauq 'it has been tidied, is tidy'; 'it has been prettied up' uterte- 'to return'	uterngauq 'he has returned to his hometown (usually only temporarily as for a visit)' paivte- 'to make available'	paivngauq 'it is available'

If one syllable ending in a fricative precedes te, or if e precedes te, then t changes to s or y and the resulting es or ey is replaced by I for most speakers:

sagte- 'to spread out, to strew'	sagesngauq, sageyngauq, sagingauq 'it is spread out', 'it is strewn' ugte- 'to get up on something'	ugesngauq, ugingauq 'it is up on something' nengete- 'to stretch'	nengesngauq, nengingauq 'it is stretched out' anete- 'to put out'	anesngauq, aningauq 'it has been put out' tevete- 'to drape over'	tevesngauq, tevingauq 'it is draped over something' upete- 'to prepare'	upesngauq, upingauq 'he is prepared, ready' egte- 'to throw out'	egingauq 'it's been thrown out' cipete- 'to have an excess' cipingaut 'they have an additional one, or ones' qerte- 'to stuff in'

qerringauq 'it is lodged in something'

With those few "short" verb bases (that is, with one vowel before e) ending in v, l, or s followed by te, the fricative remains voiceless after e insertion:

ulte- 'to turn inside out' ullesngauq, ulleyngauq, ullingauq 'it is inside out' uste- 'to cave in'

ussingauq 'it is caved in'

There are four possible polarity combinations:

tangvag- ‘to watch’	tangvagniuq ‘he says that he (himself) is watching’ pinir- ‘to be strong’	pinirniuq ‘he says that he (himself) is strong’

2) Embedded verb considered intransitive; derived verb used with a transitive ending; in this case, the subject of the derived verb 'claims' that the object of the derived verb is the subject of the embedded verb:

tangvag- 'to watch'

tangvagnia 'he says that he (another) is watching' pinir- 'to be strong' pinirnia 'he says that he (another) is strong'

3) Embedded verb considered transitive; derived verb used with an intransitive ending; in this case the subject of the derived verb 'claims' that he himself is the object of the embedded verb; the subject of the embedded verb is indefinite ('someone', 'something'), understood from the context, or expressed by a noun in the terminalis case:

tangvag- 'to watch'

tangvagniuq 'he says that someone is watching him' (the speaker); tangvagniuq arnamun 'he says that the woman is watching him' (the speaker)

alike- 'to fear'

alikniuiq 'he says that someone fears him' (the speaker); alikniuiq arnamun 'he says that the woman fears him' (the speaker)

4) Embedded verb considered transitive; derived verb used with a transitive ending. In this case the subject of the derived verb 'claims' that the object of the derived verb is the object of the embedded verb. The subject of the embedded verb is indefinite, understood from context, or expressed by a noun in the terminalis case (and it may or may not be the same as the subject of the derived verb):

tangvag- 'to watch'

tangvagnia 'he says that someone is watching him' (another); tangvagnia arnamun 'he says that the woman is watching him' (another); tangvagnia ellminun 'he says that he himself is watching him' (another)

alike- 'to fear'

aliknia 'he says that someone fears him' (another); aliknia arnamun 'he says that the woman fears him' (another)

In all cases the absolutive case term (subject or object) of the embedded verb is identical with the absolutive case term of the derived verb.

When words ending in the postbase ?quq are expanded by suffixes that begin with vowels, the final q, rather than being dropped, may be changed to rr; for example, 'on his knee' is either ciisquani or ciisqurrani; in the second variant, the u is voiceless; where such a u is subject to rhythmic lengthening, the urr becomes the voiceless labialized back velar fricative ɯrr; for example, on its wing is either yaquani or yaqɯrrani; if u is not subject to rhythmic lengthening, and is preceded by a consonant and a vowel (rather than two consonants as in ciisqurrani above), then the urr may optionally become ɯrr; thus, 'on its neck' is uyaquani, uyaqurrani, or uyaqɯrrani.

–r(ur)luq poor dear N # and –q(ur)lur- to V (of poor, dear one) # see section on “postbases of endearment or denigration” in Introduction to the Postbases; this postbase is not used in NUN or NSU; in the rest of Central Yup’ik, excluding HBC, this postbase is realized as –’uṛluq (where the apostrophe indicates extra stress); however, when this postbase is added to a base whose final vowel is prime and in position for rhythmic lengthening, the resulting configuration, VCV’uṛluq, becomes VCV’urluq (where the apostrophe indicates that the consonant is not geminated). Furthermore, when added to a base ending in g, the postbase is realized as +e’uṛluq; in HBC (and nearby areas), this postbase is realized as – ruluq when added to a base whose last vowel is in position for rhythmic lengthening or is preceded by another vowel. Otherwise, it is realized as ~u'rluq (identical with -u'rluq after a prime vowel for HBC, due to “vowel compression”). When added to a base ending in g, the postbase is realized as +urluq in HBC as elsewhere. Note that the dialect variation in “(ur)-deletion” for this postbase parallels dialect variation in “(ar)-deletion” in postbases where that occurs; < PY pb.

+te⁻² to act on one so as to cause it to V # non-productive; many verb bases cannot be used with a transitive ending unless this postbase is inserted immediately after the verb base; with other verb bases, however, the transitive ending without this postbase incorporates the meaning of this postbase (and consequently this postbase is not used with those bases). Thus, it is an apparently unpredictable characteristic of each verb whether or not this postbase is needed to form a transitive; for example, qip'uq means it twisted and nip'uq means it went out; but to say he twisted it one says qipaa (without using this postbase), whereas to say he put it out one says niptaa (with this postbase); takes transitive endings (except for reflexive or passive intransitives); follows the base immediately; < PE pb. t⁻¹

tuqu- 'to die'

tuqutaa 'he killed it'

nala- 'to die', 'to wither' nalataa 'he killed it'

nipe- 'to go out' (fire, light, etc.)

niptaa 'he put it out'

qame- 'to die down' (fire)

asme- 'to break in two'	asemtaa 'he broke it in two'; asemtuq 'it got broken'

This list is not exhaustive; with each verb that requires this postbase to form a transitive, this indicated in the entry for that verb base in the bases section of the dictionary.

This postbase is also used with "postural roots; for example:

inar- (root) 'lying down'	inartuq 'he lay down, went to bed'; inartaa 'he laid it down' ikir- (root) 'open'	ikirtaa 'he opened it' mumig- (root) 'turned over'	mumigtaa 'he turned it over'

+te⁻³ N with respect to possessor # used with the demonstrative adverb bases listed below to change them into positional stems basically shifting the frame of reference to the possessor (though this basic meaning gets somewhat altered as illustrated here); < PE pb. tə uka(ni) 'nearby'	ukatiini 'in the area toward the speaker from it' ava(ni) 'over there'	avatiini 'in the area around it' yaa(ni) 'yonder'	yaatiini 'in the area beside it' kia(ni) 'farther in'	kiatiini 'in the area farther into the room from it, upriver from it' ua(ni) 'by the exit'	uatiini 'in the direction of the door from it' ama(ni) 'way over there'	amatiini 'in the area beyond it'

Constructions with this postbase are generally not used where a positional stem exists for the area in question; thus akiani is used for 'across from it' rather than ikatiini from ika(ni) 'area across'

+te⁻⁴ to plan to act at a given time # used with time words yaaliaku 'day after tomorrow'	yaaliakutuq 'he plans to act the day after tomorrow'; yaaliakutaa 'he plans to act on it the day after tomorrow' /

tai- 'to come over'

taitaa 'he is bringing it over' uterte- 'to return, go back' ut'rutaa 'he is bringing it back', 'returning it' tekite- 'to arrive

tekiutaa 'he arrived with it' (*irregular, used instead of tekiyutaa) tage- 'to go up from shore' tagutaa 'he is bringing', 'taking it up' age- 'to go over'

agutaa 'he is bringing', 'taking it over' inarte- 'to go to bed'

inarutaa 'he is taking him to bed' igte- 'to fall'

igutaa 'he dragged it down with him'

With verbs of communicating, this postbase with a transitive endings means ‘subject Vs to the object’ (for meaning with an intransitive ending, see below):

qaner- ‘to speak’	qanrutaa ‘he is telling him’ (vs. qanraa ‘he is saying it’) qalarte- ‘to talk’	qalarutaa ‘he is talking to her’ quliri- ‘to tell a story or legend’	quliritaa ‘he is telling her a story or legend’ (quliria is also used for this) quuyurni- ‘to smile’	quuyurnitaa ‘he is smiling at her’ quutaari- ‘to wink’	quutaaritaa ‘he is winking at her’ qitevte- ‘to speak English’	qit’vutaa ‘he is speaking English to her’ qalamci- ‘to tell what has happened’	qalamcitaa ‘he told her what happened’ qanaa- ‘to talk’	qanaataa ‘he is talking to her’ airrar- ‘to tell a string story’	airrautaa ‘he is telling her a string story’

When used with an intransitive non-singular ending, this postbase often indicates reciprocity:

kenke- ‘to love’	kenkutuk ‘they ₂ love each other’ qalarte-, qanaa- ‘to talk’	qalarutuk, qanaatuk ‘they ₂ are conversing’ nallunrite- ‘to know’	nallunrilutuk ‘they ₂ know each other’ callug- ‘to fight’	calluutuk ‘they ₂ are fighting each other’

With an intransitive ending this postbase is used in “detransitive” constructions (see also -i²-) with the following bases (and probably a few others):

ikayur- ‘to help’	ikayuutug ‘he is helping out’
tegu- ‘to take’	tegutug ‘he is taking something’ nalaqe- ‘to find’	nalaqutug ‘he found something’
aqva- ‘to fetch’	aqvatug ‘he is fetching something’ nucug- ‘to pull out’	nucuutug ‘he pulled something out’ maligte- ‘to go with’, ‘to accompany’, ‘to follow’	maligutug ‘he is going with someone’

amu- 'to pull out'

amutuq 'he is pulling something out' ullag- 'to approach'

ullautuq 'he approached something'

With a transitive ending this postbase may mean subject Vs for the benefit of object or subject Vs object along with others:

iqvar-, unatar- 'to pick berries' iqvautai, unatautai 'he is picking berries for them', or 'he is picking berries with them, or taking them berry-picking', or 'he is picking them along with the (other) berries' (compare iqvarai, unatarai 'he is picking them (berries)') kipute- 'to buy' kipuyutaa 'he is buying something for her', or 'he is buying it along with other things' kenir-, ega- 'to cook' keniutaa, egataa 'he is cooking for her' enir-, niir- 'to point' eniutaa, niirutaa 'he is pointing something out to her' (vs. eniraa, niiraa 'he is pointing to it', 'pointing it out') qayali- 'to make a kayak' qayalitaa 'he is making a kayak for her' (qayalia has the same meaning) neqete- 'to catch fish' neqyutaa 'he is catching fish for her' arulair- 'to stop'

arulairutaa 'he stopped to let her off', or 'to pick her up'

With verbs describing natural phenomena, this postbase with a transitive ending means it (subject, natural phenomenon) comes upon or affects object:

erte- 'to dawn'

erutaa 'dawn came upon him (while he was outdoors, traveling)' ule- 'to flood'

ulutaa 'it (river) is flooding it' aniullugte- 'for snow to be soft' aniullugutai 'soft melting snow came upon them' (i.e., 'they encountered soft snow conditions while traveling')

There are some verb bases for which this postbase provides another transitive form with a different object than the form using the base with a transitive ending and without this postbase:

igar- 'to write' igautaa 'he is writing it down' (vs. igaraa 'he is writing to her') elag- ‘to dig’	elautaa (also irregularly elagutaa) ‘he is burying it’ (vs. elagaa ‘he is digging it’) qecir- ‘to spit’	qeciutaa ‘he spat it out’ (vs. qeciraa ‘he spat at her, it’) milqar- ‘to throw’	milqautaa ‘he is throwing it’ (vs. milqeraa ‘he is throwing something at her’) nere- ‘to eat’	nerutaa ‘he is eating with her’ (vs. neraa ‘he is eating it’)

Kiagpak ikayuangaqurluku elliin aanani, cali-llu Irr’aq aipaqagluku, murilkelluku . . . alqami taqsuqutaqatgu. ‘All summer she tried to help her mother from time to time, keeping Irr’aq company, and tending her . . . whenever her older sisters were tired of her.’ (ELN 1990:41)

UNVERIFIED WORDS

In compiling this dictionary, all available older vocabularies, wordlists, and dictionaries were consulted. Most of these are unpublished manuscripts. Most of the words in these sources are still in use and had already been included in the dictionary files before the publication of the first edition in 1984. Other words were recognized from the old sources by native speakers and, after being rewritten the modern orthography, were included in the dictionary's bases section. Some of the remaining "mystery" words have been found in the Yup'ik texts published since work on the first edition of this dictionary was concluded, and so the modern spellings of those words have been put in the present edition's bases section and they have been removed from the lists of "mystery" words.

Some words in these sources, however, remain mysterious. Either they still have not been recognized by the Yup'ik speakers who have been consulted, or, though recognized, they are not in areas ascribed to them in the old sources. The lists in the following section contain this residue (approximately 400 words), which cannot be included in the bases section. Some might represent erroneous elicitation,¹ some that are recognizable from Inupiaq or Sugpiaq may have been elicited from bilinguals in one of those language and Central Yup'ik,² some might represent actual Central Yup'ik words with the meaning ascribed to them that simply have not (yet) been verified,³ some represent words that were indeed used at one time but have passed out of use and perhaps out of the memory of all living speakers, and others are simply so roughly spelled that they cannot (or have not) been seen for words that are already in the dictionary.

Further research might yield more information about some of the remaining words on these lists; someone might recognize them, provided they have not passed out the memory of living speakers. In some cases, however, they may never be recognized or explained.

In the lists here, words are given as they were written, but with Cyrillic transliterated to Roman characters. One should be aware that early writers employed orthographies very different from today's standard orthography, generally both underdifferentiating and overdifferentiating Yup'ik sounds as well as being internally inconsistent. Also, some of the lists were copied one or more times, with errors undoubtedly creeping in at every stage. To get more of a sense of how each list's writer has represented the language, one should consult (photocopies of) the full lists, which are held by the Alaska Native Language Archives at the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

The older sources (about 1820–1870) are often of special interest because they give evidence of dialect change or ¹ See page xxiii of Grammatical Fundamentals of the Innuvit Language (Barnum 1901) concerning how the lack of a mutual language or poor interpretation (or none) can lead to this kind of error.

² In the past, when most trade was entirely in native hands and when English or even Russian did not serve at a lingua franca, there were more cases of such bilingualism and more cases of individuals or groups from one area living in another.

movement of dialect traits over the past 150 or more years. More information on present-day Yup'ik dialects can be found in the General Introduction to this volume and in the book Yup'ik Dialect Atlas and Study (Jacobson 1998).

Judging from the first known recorded vocabulary of Yup'ik by James King (see the frontispiece), compiled on Captain Cook's expedition of 1778, it appears that the basic lexicon has changed little in the area of Norton Sound and the mouth of the Yukon.⁴

In contrast, the Yukon and Norton Sound case, the old lists (Wrangell 1839, Orlov and Pinart 1871 from Bristol Bay (labeled "Aglurmiut," a dialect now restricted to Egegik⁵) and the Kuskokwim reveal certain words and traits strikingly like those of present-day Nunivak in these places. Historical accounts say — though somewhat confusedly — that the "Aglurmiut" were formerly widespread in the Kuskokwim and Bristol Bay, for a while coexisting alongside other Kuskokwim (and Bristol Bay) Yup'ik people, and in general being replaced (dialectically) by those other people everywhere except in the general area of the north Alaska Peninsula, which is where Egegik is located. The word lists back up the historical accounts. Concerning the place of the Aglurmiut dialect, the writer of these lines has written about it in detail in Yup'ik Dialect Atlas and Study (Jacobson 1995:xv–xviii), and interested readers should consult those pages. The oldest source for Aglurmiut and the only early source for Nunivak, Krhromchenko 1824, presents Nunivak as being closer to GCY than NUN is today, suggesting that perhaps Aglurmiut influence came to Nunivak after that time. For example, akerta is given for 'sun' in Nunivak (as in modern GCY), whereas puqlaneq is given for 'sun' in Aglurmiut (as in modern NUN (and EG)). Iraluq is given for 'moon' in Nunivak (as in modern GCY (and EG)) rather than tanqik, as in modern NUN and other early lists for Aglurmiut and Kuskokwim. Evidently there has indeed been much movement of people, or at any rate of dialects.

It remains to add here that the only early textual evidence of Aglurmiut, Sbornik Tserkovnykh Pesnopeniy i Molitvocloviy na Aglegmyutsko-Kuskokvimskom Narechii (Russian Orthodox Church, 1896) and Three Liturgical Gospel Readings (Orlov, 1897), which clearly displays the diagnostic traits for EG,⁶ clearly state these texts to be "Kuskokwim-Aglurmiut dialect." Thus they show that indeed the Aglurmiut dialect (now substantially EG) was formerly used or known in the Kuskokwim as well, confirming the evidence of the old lists.

An interesting example of language change presented by these lists is a word for "eye" found on two of the lists, Wrangell 1839 (as uitatek, 'eyes₂') and Orlov-Pinart 1871 (as uitassuutegka, 'my eyes₂'), both literally meaning 'devices₂ for being open-eyed', from uite- 'to open the eyes'. Despite the fact that this word has not been verified, its occurrence on two lists gives credence to it. It is similar to other descriptive instrumentals used for anatomical terms in core GCY. In fact, a similarly formed term, uitsat, is used in East Greenlandic Eskimo.⁷

⁴ The movement of some Nelson Islanders to Stebbins (and the movement of people from all over the St. Michael) causes an interruption in the Norton Sound dialect (see Yup'ik Dialect Atlas and Study (Jacobson 1998:xv), but in as much as this movement brought words and traits into the area rather than out of the area, there is no positive evidence of a dialect pattern for Norton Sound different from that of the present in the old lists.

⁵ See General Introduction on the EG dialect.

⁶ See General Introduction footnotes on the EG dialect.

⁷ East Greenlandic, like core GCY, is prime ground for evidence of name-of-deceased taboo word substitution.

The “Aglegmute” and Nunivak lists are explicitly attributed to Adol’f Karlovich Ètolin in a manuscript by K. T. Khlebnikov (1830), but because they have been published in various editions (see bibliography) as the work of Khromchenko, they are cited here under the latter’s name.

The original list by Khromchenko contains 135 Russian items with Yup’ik equivalents from three areas. Eleven remain unidentified or otherwise unenterable in the main section.

(A) = “Aglegmute” (i.e., Egegik)

(S) = Stuart Island (i.e., Norton Sound)

(N) = Nunivak

(1) old man	inuslyugak (A) [probably inugglugaq ; cf. Yup’ik inuguaq ‘doll’, Inupiaq inuk ‘person’]
(2) scoundrel	avak (A) [cf. Inupiaq agak ‘scoundrel’]
(3) bidarka [a boat]	pukhtan (A) [cf. pugtaun ‘float’]
(4) wolf	chuvutkha (A)
(5) death	niksinakh-kilyok-piyatut (N)
(6) white	ikuk (S)
(7) red	taigligoli (N)
(8) black	chumykhchitok (N)
(9) dark blue	amzhak (S), chumykhtok (N)
(10) poorly	ixchu (S)
(11) to dance	lilygvok (S)

Also of interest, because different from modern, though identified and listed in the main section; these words are respelled in the modern orthography:

(12) heat	qallatuq (A) [now limited to ‘boiling water’; also in Wrangell and Orlov-Pinart]
(13) person	suk (A) [now only Sugpiaq and some Yukon]
(14) sun	akerta (N) puqlaneq (A)
(15) bear	paugnaq (A) [now only NUN; also older Sugpiaq; also in Orlov-Pinart]
(16) twenty	cuinag (A) [now only NUN and HBC]

Nunivak entries end in stops rather than in fricatives as they do now.

WRANGELL 1839

Original list contains 350 Russian items with Yup'ik equivalents from the Kuskokwim. Sixteen remain unidentified or otherwise unenterable in the main section.

(1) stars	mittit or mittat [cf. Sugpiaq mit'aq 'star']
(2) bank, shore	agavnyk
(3) rain	kitok [cf. Sugpiaq qiteq 'rain'; also in Orlov-Pinart]
(4) coals	khumavit
(5) old man	uchinuk [cf. Sugpiaq ucinguq 'old woman']
(6) head	nibagan
(7) ears	nayutyk
(8) hands	yagagutyk [cf. yag'arte- 'to suddenly reach out']
(9) tongue	alyanuk [perhaps for alungun 'tongue']
(10) kill	chikalizgyu
(11) smelt	kpukachat
(12) cup	valyuk
(13) marmot	kal'ganakhtuli [cf. qalrir- 'to make noise (of animal)']
(14) tallow	anygnak
(15) hawk	naptak
(16) egg	tukukak [cf. tuker- 'to hatch']

Also of interest, because different from modern, though identified and listed in the main section; these words are respelled in the modern orthography:

(17) moon	tanqik [now only NUN; also in Orlov-Pinart]
(18) sun	puqlaneq [now only NUN; also in Khromchenko and Orlov-Pinart]
(19) eyes	uitatek [lit. 'devices to be open-eyed'; not used now; also in Orlov-Pinart]

ZAGOSKIN 1842

Original list contains 600 Russian items with Yup'ik equivalents from two areas. Eighteen remain unidentified or otherwise unenterable in the main section.

(C) = Cenarmiut (i.e., Norton Sound)

ENGLISH-to-YUP'IK INDEX

This index is an alphabetical list of English words and phrases used as translations of the Yup'ik dictionary entries and of lexicalized phrases of two (or more) words given in small capital letters within an entry.⁸ The index gives the Yup'ik entry or entries in which the English word in question is used in the gloss. However, this is not itself meant to be a full English-to-Yup'ik dictionary section. This index does not tell which dialect or dialects use that word, how a word is used grammatically, or the precise range of its meaning. Therefore, the person seeking a suitable Yup'ik translation for a given English word should, after looking up the English word in this section, then look up in the Yup'ik-to-English sections each Yup'ik word or postbase listed here for the English word in question.⁹

For example, quite a few Yup'ik bases and postbases are listed here for 'give'.¹⁰ Some of these mean 'to give as a permanent possession' (as in English 'he will give him hunting knife for Christmas'), while other mean 'to give for temporary or immediate use' (as in English 'give me the butter knife'), and still others mean 'to give' in a more specialized sense. One can see that in a given context it would be a mistake to use the wrong verb for 'to give'. Also some of these verbs have the thing given as the grammatical object and the recipient expressed by a noun in a certain oblique case, while others have the recipient as the grammatical object and the thing given by an oblique case noun. To get this sort of information, one must go the Yup'ik-to-English section.

Because no attempt has been made in this English-to-Yup'ik index to list all English words and give (or create) Yup'ik equivalents or possible equivalents, one may have to look under other English words similar in meaning or otherwise related to the one wanted. For example, to find a Yup'ik word for 'courageous', one may have to look under 'brave' or 'fearless', or perhaps under 'afraid' and 'not'. Yup'ik equivalents of English words such as 'a', 'the', 'in', 'from', 'will', and so forth are expressed through grammatical constructions, for which one should see Practical Grammar of ... Yup'ik (Jacobson 1995) or another Yup'ik Eskimo grammar.

Often the index will lead one to a Yup'ik word that is not the same part of speech as the English word sought. For example, under 'headache' one finds Yup'ik verb bases for 'to have a headache'; a Yup'ik noun meaning 'headache' would have to form the verb together with a postbase meaning 'state of V-ing' or 'result of V-ing'. In many cases one must use the Yup'ik-to-English section and knowledge of, and facility with, the grammar of the language to form proper and suitable Yup'ik words, phrases, and sentences; this English-to-Yup'ik index alone is insufficient.

After an English index entry, first the various Yup'ik bases for that English word are listed, then the Yup'ik postbases (and enclitics) after the bases. Postbases are given without any parenthesized initial letters (the same way that they are alphabetized in the postbase section). Postbase entries are indicated with "(pb)" and an initial hyphen (whatever the actual suffixation pattern of the postbase), and enclitic entries are indicated with "enc." and an initial equals sign. "(n)" in an English entry indicates "noun", and "(v)" indicates "verb".

After the bases and postbases may be references such as see Zagoskin or see Drebert; these refer one to the "Lists of Unidentified Words from Old Sources," indicating that there is a form in that list translated by the English word in question.

If there are two or more variants of a Yup'ik word listed in a single entry in the Yup'ik-to-English section, then only the first is given in this index. Likewise, if the Yup'ik entry has a noun and verb together, then only the noun form is given in this index. Also, only Yup'ik words that appear at the head of the entries are indexed, not derived words occurring in examples.¹¹

⁸ For example, NUNA PEKTUQ 'earthquake', is found with the entry for nuna 'land, village', also the entry for pekte- 'to move'.

⁹ The only case in which this index could properly be used without consulting the Yup'ik-to-English sections is when one is merely trying to jog one's memory about a Yup'ik word one already know.

¹⁰ The word 'to' of infinitives is systematically omitted from the English verb entries in this index, even though it appears in glosses of verbs in the Yup'ik-to-English sections.

¹¹ An exception being lexicalized multiword phrases (in small capitals in the examples part of (usually) all relevant entries. Thus looking up 'hangnail' in the index, one will find CETUUM CIUTH, which is found in the entries for both cetuk 'fingernail', and ciun 'ear'.

A tilde, “~”, in the index entry refers back to the word(s) of the entry before the colon. For example, ‘be ~ again’ in an index entry ‘hungry: be ~ again’, should be read as ‘be hungry again’.

There are also topical entries for types of terminology, such as for “legendary animals, monsters, and half-humans”, “legendary heroes and villains”, “constellations”, and “indigenous holiday”.
